Leverage the skills you've earned through your service

Many skills developed through military service transfer directly to civilian careers. Make sure you highlight the skills you earned on your resume and in job interviews.

Leadership

Leading with integrity, making decisions quickly with appropriate analysis and carrying oneself with a sense of pride and professionalism

Teamwork

Military service is built on teamwork when working together can mean life or death

Dependability

In the military, when you say you are going to do something—you do it

Ability to learn quickly

Current and former members of the military had to learn critical skills fast

Experience with advanced technology

The high-tech military prepares veterans for working with cutting edge technology

Ability to work well under pressure and difficult circumstances

Military training is hard; for those who have put their training to the test through deployment, it is probably the hardest job they'll ever have—after that, veterans are prepared for anything
